THE MINISTER OF STATE IN THE MINISTRY OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS (SHRI K. NATWAR SINGH): (a) The South-South Commission held its first meeting in October 1987 in Geneva in which it finalised its terms of reference and work programme. In the two other meetings held in 1988, the Commission considered and issued statements on 'external debt' and the Uruguay Round of Multilateral Trade Nagotiations'. It would be possible to judge the contribution of the South Commission towards achieving greater equity among world nations, only after the submission of the final report.

(b) India has programmes of bilateral co-operation with a large number of developing countries. In addition, India is playing an active role in all multilateral forums dealing with the subject of South-South co-operation. India took the initiative in covening the first Ministerial Meeting of the Global System of Trade Preference (GSTP) and actively participated in the negotiations leading to the Agreement on GSTP signed in Belgrade this year. We propose to contribute further to building on it and expanding its scope.

We propose to hold the meeting of the Governing Council of the NAM Centre on Science and Technology which is located in Delhi and is provisionally operational.

At India's initiative, the first meetng of an inter-governmental Consultative Conference of Experts on New and High Technologies was held in New Delhi in October 1988. We intend to take follow-up action on several cooperative programmes and activities indentified in the five themes considered in the Conference, i.e. informatics and telecommunications, micro-electronics and computer software, bio-technology, renewable sources of energy, and new materials technology.

The Government of India has contributed US $ 400,000 to the South Commission Dr. Man Mohan Singh, former Deputy Chairman of the Planning Commission. is the Secretary-General of the South Commission. The Commission also has another Indian as a member.
